(01-05 June 2026)

Organized by National Water Academy, CWC, Pune

INTRODUCTION & BACKGROUND

Increasing water scarcity is one of the most critical challenges facing India today. As demand for water continues to exceed supply in many regions, effective governance of available water resources is essential to ensure water security, equitable allocation, and resolution of conflicts.

India has a comprehensive legal and institutional framework governing water resources, including mechanisms to address river valley and inter-state disputes. Given the country’s diverse geography and competing sectoral demands, a sound understanding of water laws and governance is vital for sustainable development.

Water governance refers to the political, social, economic, and administrative systems that influence the development, allocation, and management of water resources. It determines both equity and efficiency in water distribution while balancing socio-economic needs with ecological sustainability.

India shares transboundary rivers such as the Ganga, Brahmaputra, and Indus with neighboring countries, making international cooperation crucial for sustainable and conflict-free water management.

This training program aims to build capacity among professionals and policymakers to effectively address emerging challenges in water resource management.

INTRODUCTION & BACKGROUND

Increasing water scarcity is one of the most critical challenges facing India today. As demand for water continues to exceed supply in many regions, effective governance of available water resources is essential to ensure water security, equitable allocation, and resolution of conflicts.

India has a comprehensive legal and institutional framework governing water resources, including mechanisms to address river valley and inter-state disputes. Given the country’s diverse geography and competing sectoral demands, a sound understanding of water laws and governance is vital for sustainable development.

Water governance refers to the political, social, economic, and administrative systems that influence the development, allocation, and management of water resources. It determines both equity and efficiency in water distribution while balancing socio-economic needs with ecological sustainability.

India shares transboundary rivers such as the Ganga, Brahmaputra, and Indus with neighboring countries, making international cooperation crucial for sustainable and conflict-free water management.

This training program aims to build capacity among professionals and policymakers to effectively address emerging challenges in water resource management.
